The most common types of wagers on horse/dog races include:

- Win – to succeed the bettor must pick the runner that wins the race.
- Place – the bettor must pick a runner that finishes either first or second.
- Show – the bettor must pick a runner that finishes first, second or third.
- Exacta or perfecta – the bettor must pick the two runners that finish first and second, in the exact order.
- Quinella or quiniela – the bettor must pick the two runners that finish first and second, but need not specify which will finish first (similar to an exacta box).
- Trifecta – the bettor must pick the three runners that finish first, second, and third, in the exact order.
- Superfecta – the bettor must pick the four runners that finish first, second, third and fourth, in the exact order.
- Daily Double – the bettor must pick the winners of two consecutive races.
- Pick 3 – the bettor must pick the winners of three consecutive races; like doubles, many tracks offer 'running' or 'rolling' Pick 3's.
- Pick 4 – the bettor must pick the winners of four or more consecutive races.

Some racetracks also offer Pick 5 and Pick 6 wagers, with the latter paying out a consolation return to bettors correctly selecting five winners out of six races, and with "rollover" jackpots accumulating each day until one or more bettors correctly picks all six winners.

Win, place and show wagers are known as straight bets. People making straight bets also can employ the strategy of an across-the-board bet. Here the bettor picks a runner and bets equal sums on it to win, place, and show.

Bettors can make multiple wagers on exotic bets. Most exotic wagers in racing are a 1 dollar minimum (exacta, quinella, trifecta, and superfecta). Due to the difficulty of the superfecta, some racetracks have lowered the minimum on the superfecta to 10 cents. This 10 cent bet is very popular as it permits a bettor with a small bankroll to cover many combinations and still have a chance for a nice payoff.

A box consists of a multiple wager in which bettors bet all possible combinations of a group of runners in the same race. A box can be placed around exotic betting types such as exacta, trifecta or superfecta bets. This places a bet for all combinations of the numbers in the box. A trifecta box with 3 numbers has 6 possible combinations.

A key involves making a multiple wager with a single runner in one race bet in one position with all possible combinations of other selected horses in a single race.

A wheel consists of betting all runners in one position of a bet involving two or more positions. For example a 1-all exacta wheel bets the #1 runner in the first position with every other runner in the second.
